I must confess that I am not a great believer in instructor's manuals, because I believe that teaching is personal - we develop our own ways of telling the story that we want to tell. Consequently, I have developed a fairly unconventional manual, where my notes on teaching are included as notes to powerpoint slides. You can.

The problems for each chapter should be read as part of that chapter, even those that are not assigned. They often add important information not covered in the text. • The results of earlier problems, whether or not assigned, may be used in later problems. Many problems are parts of sequences. • Before working the.
